

As I walked through the streets of Paris I could see people with the iconic french moustache waving at me - even their moustache waved, as I walked passed I smelled the delicious croissants from the cafes ahead and could see tourists waiting in line with their mouths' watering as the people who came out of the cafe held a warm buttered pastry in their hands looking at it as if it was a piece of gold. After tasting the delicious croissants at the cafe, I walked long and far, thinking I was lost until I saw the 'Notre-Dame de Paris' Cathedral. I walked past more tourists taking pictures of the Cathedral as some walked into it looking around interested to learn about everything.

Continuing to walk, I heard the chatter of excited students with their teacher holding a board up with their school name on it to find the other half of the class I felt the cold wind blowing hair in my face. I could also see a giant ship filled with people coming to visit this amazing land. I took a vehicle to Paris and to see the Eiffel tower. When I got there and stood in front of the tower it was leaning over me, I also went to see Monte Blanc it was a giant compared to me. Massif Central was breathtaking with more green than I've ever seen. Walking across the grass was calming and the swaying sounds of the water calmed me even more.

My day in France was great and I've seen spectacular things! But before I go I have to go and eat some famous traditional France aliments. (Aliments means food in french.) I had some warm bread for the entre, soupe à l'oignon for the meal, and finally for dessert a chocolate treat! A chocolate soufflé!
